

POLITICS OF HERITAGE - SCHOOL FOR SONIC MEMORY

Nomadic Mediterranean Residency Programme for Sound and Urban Heritage

About the residency

As part of the “ALEXANDRIA” Creative Europe project coordinated by MUCEM, Theatrum Mundi and Onassis Stegi are producing a pluri-disciplinary nomadic residency program exploring sound, memory and trans-Mediterranean resonances. The curatorial lead for this program will be Theatrum Mundi.

The call is aimed at anyone engaged in the study, protection or production of collective urban memory - in the form of built heritage, soundscape, music, stories, social and political practice, with sound as a primary medium of research. Together, and in collaboration with local artists, urbanists and researchers, the participants will form a ‘school’ for sonic memory, investigating the ways that three cities across the mediterranean resonate with one another, how elements of a connected and conflictual past are made audible within them.

The school will develop a shared conversation over the course of the residencies - learning from local urbanists, activists and cultural producers as well as one another - leading to a collection of new, interrelated works in the form of texts, sound and/or film. The residencies will value the perspective of the visitor - rather than aiming for a historical account of each city, we are interested in the particular shared space that is created through exchange between three cities across the Mediterranean, the ways sonic memories are carried between, and resonate within them. Heritage, of course, can be a shared resource for remembering and an infrastructure for belonging, but it can also be misappropriated, distorting urban development for exclusion and private profit. By developing new ideas and artefacts through sonic methods, we are proposing to think of heritage as something made through active processes of creative remembering, as we move between places that echo within us.

Questions for the research

- How are the rhythms of one city transposed to another? Are they in sync, counter-rhythm, or poly-rhythm?
- How have the acoustics of public spaces shaped or been shaped by public gathering? How are these resonances appropriated now?
- Can we identify trans-mediterranean sonic practices?
- Can the past of one city be heard in another’s sonic culture?
- Is it possible to find sonic traces of what has marked the city, or become absent?
- What role does each city’s sounds play in the dreams, nostalgias, or hopes of another?

- How do cities speak to one another about their experiences?
- How does classification as a heritage site affect the overall dynamics of the surrounding urban environment and what are the politics of preservation?

Outcomes

- One completely new text, score, or recorded audio-visual work produced individually or in collaboration with a contributor from one of the cities visited (i.e. guest writer, performer, editor contributing partially to the work - €500 fee)
- Live presentation of this work in at least one public event (i.e. as a talk, solo performance, or screening)
- Recorded / exhibited presentation of the work in two other public events. Works produced must be easily transportable from one exhibition location to another and should not take the form of voluminous / heavy constructions or depend on sophisticated technology for their installation.

Residency format

We are calling for expressions of interest to join a 6-month production process, based around 3 one-week creative research residencies:

- Athens, November 2021
- Alexandria, January 2022
- Marseille, March 2022

The selected artists will have to travel to all 3 cities and collaborate with a group of local artists. A final week-long event will be organised in Biella, Italy in July 2022 to share insights and the results of the residency.

This schedule is provisional and contingent on the Covid-19 developments globally. Travel and activities are subject to being postponed between January and July 2022.

About Onassis Stegi

www.onassis.org

Onassis Stegi, the cultural hub of Onassis Foundation, is the place where contemporary culture meets aesthetics and science. The place where courageous, restless, daring Greek artists find the means to showcase their work; the place where international collaborations are nurtured; the stage on which the boundaries between science, art, society, education, learning and politics are renegotiated. Above all, Onassis Stegi is the space where questions are asked which feed the mind and spirit, which query gives, with this ideal ultimate goal: generating actions, interventions and ideas which shape and shake society. The Onassis Stegi building hosts theatrical and musical productions, film screenings, art and digital shows, but its activities and central concept extend beyond the four walls of the center on Syngrou Avenue. Since 2012, the Onassis Foundation has acquired the Cavafy Archive with a view on providing free and open access to its materials, on promoting the Egyptian Greek poet C. P. Cavafy's work and the international character of his poetry and on bolstering education and culture through archival resources.
